This is my favourite popiah in Singapore.

This is one of the foods which I could probably eat every single day without getting sick of it. If anyone were to ask me for a food recommendation, it would be My Cosy Corner's popiah. Located in a small dark corner at Coronation Plaza, this small eatery may not look impressive but their popiah is worth walking that distance to Coronation Plaza. It's usually sold out by 5 – 6 pm so the closer it is to evening time, the higher the risk of making a wasted and disappointed trip.

I love my vegetables and fruits. If I were to miss out on eating vegetables or fruits in a meal or in a day, it would leave me feeling very uneasy and gross so that I'll have to grab an apple when I reach home at night. So if I'm feeling hungry or I need a light dinner, I would try to have popiah!

At My Cosy Corner, they keep the popiah skins in this special airtight metal container so that it remains moist throughout the day. The skin is thin and soft which is how it should be – unlike places which sell popiahs with tough and hard skins which makes it difficult to take a bite and you'd be struggling to chew off the skin and by then the filling and condiments would have fallen out of place. What's so special about this popiah is probably the crispy and crunchy fried rice bits which is added to the filling. And these rice bits do not become soggy even when you takeaway the popiah instead of having it immediately!

A popiah costs $2.20 but they are quite generous with the filling so it is quite sizeable. I could probably finish off more than 2 rolls by myself.

You can order the popiah with chilli and the chilli really does pack quite a bit of a punch. I usually am able to take chilli quite well but the chilli here has quite a numbing effect on your tongue and really has quite a spicy kick. So I usually order a Grass Jelly drink with my popiah and what's interesting is that they use grass jelly chunks instead of the grated kind so it's quite fun to slurp it up.

A Da Paolo Sticky Toffee Date Pudding Cupcake for dessert anyone?

A dessert in the form of a cupcake. Another ingenious creation – just like the Brulee Tart!
